New York, July 16, 1841.

Dear Garrison:

Having an opportunity to forward a line by a gentleman going to Boston, I write to do an errand which I forgot when I saw you last. You will recollect, that sometime last winter I forwarded to you a long essay on the rights of woman, written by Mrs. Dr. Wilson of Cadiz, Ohio, which had been offered for publication in the Standard, and declined as "extraneous." I sent it to you by request of Dr. Wilson, who now wants it published or returned. Will you look to it at once; and, if you do not insert it in the Liberator, forward it to me?

We have appointed George Foster as Agent, and his commission will be forwarded at once.

I hear nothing of an Almanac for next year. We ought to have one by all means. Will not Mrs. Chapman prepare one, to be published jointly by the American & Massachusetts Anti-Slavery Societies? Whatever is done should be done quickly. Of course, it will amply pay its way.

I met our ~~old~~<sup>quondam</sup> friend "Dr.
Manford," alias John Colman, in the street a few days ago. Although I had a full view of him, I was so surprised at seeing him, that it did not occur to me to speak to him until he had passed me. I am not certain whether he recognized me or not; but I think he did, although he did not appear to do so.

Mary Anne sends love.

Yours, in haste,

Oliver Johnson.

P.S. George W. B. passed through here yesterday on his way home. His health is somewhat improved. He thought he should visit Boston in about a fortnight.
